Labor Day
1979
David drops in . . . throws a two day blowout redecorating the dorms. Quality Inn stock jumps four points in active trading.
After the 90 mph winds subsided, debris and students settled wherever they could. Skies soon clear and people reach out to new spaces and faces.
Sub Tropical Fluids:
great for immersion and ingestion and when contaminated with the proper river sediments can be applied externally for the cure of various skin disorders.
As the quarter progresses, so do we . . .
The sun, the sand, puddle baths help to pass the time, and the pipe square gets assembled one more time.
“See Charlie, I can even do it with my eyes closed.”
Opportunities abound
for self expression ...
bum-out a dog with your dischords . . . .
display your better features,
or borrow a roommate’s wheels
for a spin out in the Savannahs.
Individuals being who they choose and living with the results keeps everything animated and . . .
... slightly unhinged.
Beneath every student’s technical austerity there exists a bedrock of innocent lunacy struggling for expression uhh . . .

Well now that it's all over I can look back at the year and recall all of the exciting times we at the Leviathan have had. I can still hear the loud blare of the stereo and the low grumble of the freshmen staff members. How I long for those cool humid nights in the darkroom, coming out of that cave at sunrise with wide eyes and tingling skin. Most of all I can remember my friends stopping by to and from the Rat, keeping me motivated to work away into the night. I would mention them all but they know who they are so I won’t waste the ink. Special thanks goes out to Jim Johnson who told it exactly like it was in the opening section and to Mark Churches and Jackie Davison for their photos. With a twist of his arm Martin Bradburn drew the snarly Leviathan on the front cover along with some other revealing artwork. I would especially like to thank Mr. Bill Brokaw who raised me through my photographic puberty and on to tackle a beast. “Thanks Bill!” for your motivating conversation and darkroom expertise.

Conned Leviathan evolved back in 1977 with a keen group of students (no longer at FIT) who weren’t afraid to say things needed changing. This year marks the fourth and possibly final volume of the Leviathan. Unless more students get involved there is a danger there will be no student publication on the Jensen Beach campus because 1 or a few students do not want to labor with the whole responsibility. Do what you can for the students of FIT. Don’t let the Leviathan or it’s vigor die!
